3. CURRICULUM AND INSTRUCTION

3.1 Demonstration Of Teaching Method In Figure Drawing

With the assistance of six of his art students, Mr. David Durham demonstrated a teaching method he had developed for Figure Drawing. The Figure Drawing I course at the Meramec Community College is the only course where this system is used. This system is composed of a three-sided plastic cubicle, approximately seven feet tall. With the use of a live model in the center of the cubicle, the art students may stand on the exterior of the cubicle and sketch the human anatomy on the outside surface of the plastic cubicle.

Mr. Durham said he had spent several years teaching Figure Drawing in the conventional method and students found the course extremely boring and uninteresting. The Art Department Division Chairman at the Meramec Community College has equated one year of instruction in a Figure Drawing course using this unique system to two years in the same course using the conventional system.

3.2 Report On American Council On Education Conference

Dr. Cosand reported briefly on the American Council on Education meeting he attended in Washington D. C. on October 12th and 13th concerning the topic, "Whose Goals For Education." Present to deliver major addresses were: President Gould, State University of New York; President Anderson, Reed College in Oregon; Board President of Washington State University; McGeorge Bundy, President of the Ford Foundation, and in addition there were seven section meetings in which a major presentation was critiqued by three panelists. The four people at each section meeting included a Board Member, a college president, a faculty member, and a student. Throughout the entire two-day conference, there was complete unanimity on the part of the students that higher education had lost its vision -- lost its goals -- lost its leadership -- and that the faculties and administrators together, along with the Boards, were subject to indictment.

In the various presentations made, the question was raised again and again -- "Who has set the goals for higher education?" Has it been the pressures from the citizens, pressures within the departments of higher education, or from pressures within the institutions? Has it been from the president, the deans, division chairmen, faculty, or students?

All of the students who spoke were extremely critical of higher education and its leadership. Their major criticism was that the curricula and courses were no longer relevant, and the students generally agreed that: (1) the student himself should choose his courses to be taken because much of the required curricula are completely irrelevant and worthless. (2) The student should be able to choose the faculty from which to take subjects. (3) Students should be educated how to learn to learn, rather than to learn facts -- for facts are becoming increasingly obsolete.

In her presentation on the role of a Board Member, the President of the Board of Trustees of Washington State University stated that generally, most Boards meet infrequently and do not know the officers of the college or how curricula are taught in their institutions.

There was complete unanimity that the goals of higher education are either obsolete or are becoming obsolete and need complete revision and re-evaluation. Dr. Cusace thought the Junior College District should be aware of the needs facing higher education and the community college today, and of the abysmal lack of understanding of the philosophy of the comprehensive community college among other segments of higher education.
4. PHYSICAL FACILITIES

4.1 Junior College District Provisions For Handicapped Students

Mr. Lawrence F. O’Neill, Coordinator of Physical Facilities presented a detailed report on a meeting held on October 20, 1967 with the three Junior College District architects and the coordinator of programs for crippled children in the Special School District to study specific design and construction of District campus facilities with respect to provisions for handicapped students. The South Communications Building is completed, but the building will not be occupied until November 10th, when the furniture and equipment can be installed.
